A Man One Time
Took a gallon jug to his grocer to have it filled with molasses, in due time his bill came in and he was charged with one and a half gallons. His only remark was that he did not object to paying for the one and a half gallons but he hated to put such a strain on the jug. This is our case precisely, we don't object to carrying a big stock, but we don't want to burst out the sides of our buildings. Consequently, Androscoggin.

In the case of the heirs of Charles Wood, of Cambridge, Mass against the executor of the late Mrs Caroline A Wood, which has been on trial for ten days or more in Cambridge, the jury came in on Friday, and reported they were unable to agree. This was a case in which Bates College was interested, Mrs Wood having willed the College $50,000. The College is sure of half that sum if the case goes against the defendant.

Cumberland.

Mr Joseph T Woodward, assistant manager of the Sewall Heater Company of Portland, stood on a scaffolding in the Oxford building and shouted down the elevator shaft to some one below. The elevator descended and struck him on the head. It happened that the way in which the elevator struck him allowed his head to be shoved into a narrow space between the elevator and the side of the shaft. Mr Woodward was considerably bruised, but not seriously injured. It was a very narrow escape.

Franklin.

A citizen of Eustis while on a deer hunt recently encountered a bear and put two bullets through him. He very soon caught sight of three other bears in a tree. They commenced coming down and the hunter killed them all. He gave each one a bullet in just the right place. He was very lucky not to encounter more bears as he used the last one on the fourth bear, says the Phonograph.

It is said that Belfast people have gone into a regular cat shipping business, an extensive shipment having been made from there last week. The variety known as "coon" cats are quite plenty in that vicinity while rare in other places, especially outside the State.

Mr. Simon Conner, an old and respected citizen of Unity, died November 1. He went about his work in the morning, apparently as well as usual. About the middle of the forenoon he went into the house and complained of not feeling well. His wife fixed him some simple remedy which gave relief. He still lay on the lounge and his wife, who was about her work, hearing a peculiar noise observed that he was in a fit or some kind, after which he lived but a few minutes. Apoplexy was the probable cause of his death. He was buried Sunday, November 4th, with Masonic honors.

The case of Mrs Fannie L. Dickson, of Portland, vs Dr Augustus H. Burbank, of Yarmouth, an action for damages laid at $15,000, for malpractice in treating a broken hip, was postponed in the Cumberland Superior Court, Monday, the counsel for the plaintiff stating that his client was neither able to come into court to testify or to give her deposition. At a future time, if the plaintiff recovers, another suit can be brought.

Geo C. Milliner, of Kennebunkport, objected to his daughter Lillie receiving the attentions of a young man named Frank Noonan, of Cape Porpoise, and the young lady met her lover at the house of her grandfather, Henry Brooks. Last Thursday, Milliner went to his father-in-law's house and found Lillie and the young man there. Some hard words were followed by a rough and tumble fight, in which Milliner's head was cut badly. He had a warrant sworn out against Brooks and Noonan, and they were brought before the Saco municipal court, Monday, and discharged after a hearing.

W. J. Barnwell, a mathematician and organist of Berkshire, England, claims to have squared the circle. He has been at work on the time honored problem for fifteen years. His solution consists of eight figures which, in concrete, shape form a perfect cyclometer. Mr Barnwell has laid his formula before the French Academy of Sciences.

The report that the Czar of Russia had become addicted to the cigarette habit was thought by many people to be the outcome of Nihilistic misrepresentation. But a silver cigarette case which the Czar carried in his pocket at the time of the recent railroad accident, in which he nearly lost his life was crushed flat. It is evident, therefore that the Autocrat of all the Russias is a cigarette fiend.

"It is not the first time I've made calf's foot jelly," retorted the women severely, as he vanished and she prepared to sit down.

The Methodist vestry was filled Friday evening the occasion being the public meeting of the Calorhetorian Society. The programme of which was well carried out. This society is the oldest literary society in town and to it the people are indebted for many literary entertainments. The features of the evening were the declamations, the paper and the music which was under the direction of Miss Weller of the Seminary. She is naturally a fine musician, and a graduate of one of New York's best Musical Universities, hence her musical attainments are of the highest class, and are highly appreciated by the best people in our village. The society made her a fine present, recently as a token of their appreciation.

Hampden Letter

[Regular Correspondence Whig and Courier.]

The Republicans celebrated Monday evening with a torchlight procession, bonfire fireworks etc. There was a general illumination of the buildings, most of the residences being decorated with Chinese lanterns, presenting a fine appearance. The procession, headed by a drum corps paraded the principle streets, and with the tin horns, ringing of bells and firing of crackers, the Democrats were reminded that an election had recently taken place.

The academy closes Friday after a very successful term. The students have a public entertainment in the Town Hall Thursday evening. The winter term begins December 4th. The indications point to a large attendance.

A Talk with a Detective

MR DAVIS SHOWS A PRESS MAN WHAT A BLOODHOUND CAN DO—DOGS THAT WILL BE THE TERROR OF BURGLARS AND CRIMINALS.

[Portland Press.]

To keep abreast of the times now-a-days, it is necessary to be well up in whatever profession or business one chooses to follow. Especially is this true in the detective's calling, and if a man expects to successfully pursue law breakers and criminals, bringing them to account for their misdeeds, he must be wide awake, and he cannot afford to be without those things that materially aid in his profession. Detective Robert Davis is aware of these facts, and his latest advance step is the purchase of a couple of English thoroughbred bloodhounds. He has had one of the hounds, a pup between four and five months old, in his possession for some time, but the other will arrive here to-day. The hound which Detective Davis has been training, has a very fine coat, and ears so long that they almost touch the ground. He is called King, and weighs forty two pounds. A full grown English bloodhound weighs from sixty five to eighty pounds, and they are said to be unerring when once on the trail. No matter how many people cross the trail, the well trained hound keeps on the right scent, and never gets confused.

"Is your hound ferocious?" queried the writer, as he walked into Mr Davis' comfortable office in the First National Bank building, yesterday.

"Not in the least," replied the detective, "on the contrary he is as gentle as a dog can be, a great favorite with children and a pet with everybody."

"But I thought bloodhounds were ugly and altogether dangerous."

"There's where you are mistaken, that is, so far as a thoroughbred English bloodhound is concerned. You have doubtless read of the ferocious slave-hunting dogs of the South and formed from them your idea of all others. The dogs used to hunt fugitive negroes in the days of slavery and were a cross between the bloodhound and the mastiff, and were made ferocious by various means, for instance by tying pieces of wood about their necks and requiring the dogs to drag them. The object was to get a dog that would be ugly. Perhaps you would like to see my dogs performs?"

growth of fir and pine trees a boy aged twelve or fourteen years old was sent off on the run into the woods and told when he had gone a considerable distance to conceal himself as best he could in the thick brush. The bloodhound was given the scent from the boy's hat, and when the young fellow had long disappeared from sight the hound which had been whining with impatience to be off on the trail was released by Detective Davis and away he went baying occasionally to signify that he had the scent. Through bushes, over stone walls across streams, and ledges he went, never losing the trail until he brought up in a dense growth of dwarf fir in which the boy was concealed. A joyous bark announced that he had found the runaway and Mr Davis and the Press man soon arrived at the spot and again the boy was sent out. This time it took a very difficult run through very dense ground, younger growth and across ledges of loose rocks on a wide hill. But the unerring and faithful hound followed the scent, losing the trail but once, until he found the boy. I was more than amazed and fields the boy tried to elude the bloodhound but all in vain.

"I have had dealings with many [illegible] experiments," said the detective, "with a bloodhound could form skill to the criminal. I expect to make a very useful and hurting [illegible] whether in the wooded or thickly settled country or in a village where burglaries have been committed this will follow the scent of the burglar and find his lair in the wood. I would have him in a very short time. In the stocks in Cumberland Mill, and the [illegible] kept away from the house so that the bloodhound could have fair play until the final end was reached. Taking place. While I was [illegible] the bloodhound's [illegible] right scent and manage his speedy trainers. Had the murderer left no part of his clothing behind [illegible] have talk with the scent from the trail would have been [illegible] it was the hounds were put. The band of policemen were afraid of the men who lack experience in handling bloodhounds.

"I shall run my dogs on the trail of [illegible] in following trail I shall [illegible] which is fast [illegible] and two keep up with them and pursue the person wanted. All a trifle more [illegible] ing my bloodhounds will be of great [illegible] [illegible]
